Reasons for comment:

Comments:	While I definitely agree that we need to build new homes there are much better places where this could be done. This is on farmland which is needed right now but will be even more important for UK food security in the future, when you consider the fact that we are in a climate crisis, where the chance of global crop yields failing will become more and more likely. The UK is also one of the most nature depleted counties in the world, and building first in the countryside rather than building first on abandoned brown belt areas is not sensible. I therefore for the reasons outlined oppose this planning application. There are lots of places outside of rural Gravesham, such as in the centre which are abandoned and should be the first place that building for homes should begin.
