Reasons for comment:

Comments:

*This is rich farmland which, if lost to building, can never be recovered. We need to keep our farmlands for the sake of our children and grandchildren, our decendants. The uncertain future future would be very bleak for them if they lost the means to grow our own crops. The farmers would not be selling this land were it not for the inheritance tax imposed on them by the present government.

* The site is next to a Special Needs school, on a narrow road. Building work would be particularly disturbing for them.
It's bad enough now, with heavy lorries going to the weighbridge at Green Street Green.

Local schools and doctors are unable to cope with the demand even now.

It is Green Belt. Green Belt was designed to prevent urban sprawl as well providing London with clean air. Recent programmes on Television have shown how moss and trees are essential in combating Carbon emissions. Leave the Geen Belt alone.

Kind regards
