Reasons for comment:
Comments:	Allowing this planning permission would mean a damage to wildlife and potential issues to people living next to or near. The roads surrounding are already damaged, in poor condition and very narrow. Any deliveries needed for building equipment whether that be diggers for land prep, materials need larger vehicles will block locals from getting through creating traffic. This would cause further damage to wildlife, roads and create pollution in the local area. The roads are already very damaged and allowing this increase in traffic on the surrounding roads would create more damage which could be dangerous and create hazards. It would create multiple types of pollutions, such as noise, light and air. More traffic creates all three of these alone, not considering the other causing factors. This will affect the wildlife massively and drive away protected species, meaning they would be driven to urban areas which would create higher death rates of animals and creating higher number of endangered species. This is not even considering the amount of trees cut down.

Kind regards
