Reasons for comment:

Comments:	The land in question is part of the greenbelt. I see no reason as to why there should be any more building or homes erected or allowed. Shorne is quite a peaceful parish, and I believe in allowing gypsies to get their foot in the door and make a home on that land will only open the doors to future applications. There has been quite a few instances lately with travellers burgling in the area, and do not feel this would encourage resolve, and feel it will have quite the opposite effect. The land in question is close to [REDACTED] garden and I could do without the worry. With all that being said I have no problem myself with travelers and grew up in abbeywood next to a big site, trouble does follow them, there are vast amounts of land in the country I'm sure there are more suitable areas without making Shorne and the local greenbelt any worse of. Plans have been rejected several times on various occasions to build and turn it into other things and have been rejected over and over, I don't see how rejecting a house but allowing static homes is any different once approved the homes are never going to be moved. And you may have well allowed people to build previously, which is unfair on previous occupiers.
