Reasons for comment:
Comments:	The access and buildings next to Helen Allison School, a special educational needs (SEN) institution, will significantly disturb its students, who are particularly sensitive. This development is likely to induce alarm, stress, and sensory overload, undermining the calm and low-noise environment essential for the wellbeing of these vulnerable children. Moreover, this site is classified as high-grade agricultural land that has been farmed for centuries and plays a vital role in food production. Additionally, the pollution affecting both schools on Longfield Road will increase dramatically, exacerbating the challenges faced by all children attending, especially during peak congestion times at the start and end of the school day. There are also currently three planning applications in the vicinity, and as this is designated greenbelt land, it should be protected from development. The A227 is already heavily congested, and adding another 1,500 cars would pose significant challenges.

Kind regards
