Reasons for comment:

Comments:	In my view this is an absolute no go. Wrotham Road through Meopham is already at breaking point with temporary lights going up virtually on a monthly basis! Coupled with that there is 3 schools on that stretch of road which cause enough chaos now in the morning & afternoon! It is also between the A2 & M20, so if either of these hit a problem you've then got all the traffic diverting through meopham & the A227 has a history of sink holes, so this really wouldn't help! I live in Harvel & when there is a problem on the A227 then whitehill road & Harvel Lane basically become a car park as does Foxendown lane! The road from meopham through to Cobham via sole street is basically no more than a country lane in places so unless there was significant widening & improvement there then it's just a major accident waiting to happen! Or some bright spark would come up with the idea of traffic lights to slow everything down even more! On top of that, the local infrastructure & amenities are stretched to limit as it is! Will there be new schools built? New doctors surgery? Will the drainage system be upgraded at all?! I'm guessing probably not or if so, not to the extent it needs to be! All in all this along with the other major developments being considered in meopham are an absolute no no in my opinion!
