Reasons for comment:

Comments:	The A227 cannot cope with the traffic it currently has. There are daily misses with the large lorries that currently use it which is only going to be exacerbated by further usage of lorries delivering to the site inevitably leading to more accidents and potential deaths. Adding an additional 100 houses is not going to help solve this issue. The land is green belt land - Labour pledged to build on brown sites. What grounds are there to go against their policy? The pollution caused by current traffic flows already exceeds the emission limits. The drainage in this area already causes issues and roads are always being dug up because of burst pipes; this will be made worse by the weight of extra traffic. Additional building will also add to the risk of flooding. Water pressure is already at limited levels - more housing will no doubt reduce the pressure further. The infrastructure of the area is already fully stretched ie Doctors' surgeries; schools; parking at shops etc. This is rural countryside and the impact on the environment and harm to animal species would be detrimental.
