Reasons for comment:
Comments:	If a high court injunction ruled this land from being built on why would this now be allowed? Is this not completely undermining a ruling that was obviously enforced for genuine reasons. If this were to be allowed it will not only have devastating consequences for the local community and land around the area that has been damaged and is continuing to be damaged beyond repair. Will have a massive impact on wildlife that thrive in these rural areas but most importantly will open up a precedent for unauthorised development in other areas in our communities and further afield. As well as endorsing damage to public land as acceptable!

Kind regards
